Newbigin is such a wealth of wisdom and brings deep insights into the often confusing web of confluence of the human psyche, the broader culture and the Word of God. Having been steeped in Western academic traditions and then spending 4 decades in the murkiness of the Eastern culture which was on the threshold of growing up from under the shackles of the 'underdeveloped world', gave him a vantage point that very few get to have. I think the most powerful point he makes in his book is the elucidation of the idea of the 'elect' and how that translates to missions. Some Christians make the doctrine of Election ALL there is to Christianity (hyper Calvinists), then you have the Pelagian Armenians who will run away from anything smacking of election as a rat runs away from a cat. Dr. Newbigin does not try to tread a middle course, he goes of them both and talks about the doctrine of election from at least 3 perspectives. 1. To not violate the relational integrity of the human psyche. 2. To make a few into a blessing to many. 3. To make the election not into an elite privilege but as the initiation of the 'suffering community' that witnesses to the world. 1) That the doctrine of election is crucial for how human beings come to know the Truth, not as 'spiritual monads' who individualistically pursue a Truth by themselves but as communal beings to who in come to know the Truth through their inter-relatedness to God and fellow man. This idea implies that God has to choose a group of people through which He reaches out to another group of people to expand His Kingdom. 2) The corollary to the point 1 is that if Truth of God has to spread through communities, it has to start somewhere and a community has to be chosen, which happens to be Israel in this case. Ironically, the first becomes the last, so chosen Israel gets disinherited to become the last. 3) From the human point of view, election is not a claim on God neither is it a privilege of the elite. Election is the means of creating a community of Saints who will witness to the world through their suffering as a partaking of the suffering of Christ. It is thus that they become dispensers of God's blessing to many. Of course, Dr. Newbigin traces through multiple other brilliant threads of thought brilliantly weaved together... It is worth anyone's time whose mission in life is to see God's reign come to fruition in this world. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Four Stars By Craig S. Reynolds pleased with the response

Aimed at bringing contemporary concerns in mission theology to a wide-reading public, this volume flows from Newbigin's extensive experience in the mission field and from lectures developed especially to prepare men and women for missionary service. Newbigin describes the Christian mission as the declaration of an open secret open in that it is preached to all nations, secret in that it is manifest only to the eyes of faith. The result is a thoroughly biblical attempt to lead the church to embrace its Christ-given task of presenting the gospel in our complex modern world. This revised edition includes a helpful index and a new preface.
